U. S. Leaders Urge Jews Not To Take Part In Public School Graduation Exercises

Leaders of Jewish community councils and Jewish religious and civic organizations described baccalaureate graduation exercises in public schools as violations of the principle of separation of church and state. The plenary session of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, meeting in Washington, D.C., expressed strong opposition to all such exercises that are religious in nature or contain religious elements.

In a resolution, the delegates urged rabbis not to participate in such exercises and recommended that rabbis consider conducting special services in their houses of worship honoring Jewish graduates, says the New York Times. The National Community Relations Advisory Council is the coordinating agency of Jewish community councils and major Jewish groups devoted to safeguarding civil liberties and rights and furthering intergroup relations. It held its seventeenth conclave at the Shoreham Hotel. The Council's headquarters are in New York.

The Council also called on the United States Government to take a strong stand against discrimination against American citizens by foreign states. It urged the Government to refuse to enter into any international agreement or treaty that "differentiates among American citizens on ground of race or religion."

This was a reference to the exclusion of Jewish citizens of the United States from the American-leased military base at Dhahran, Saudi Arabia.

In a related action, the delegates asserted that the solution of the Arab refugee problem must come through resettlement of the refugees in Arab lands. In this connection, the body urged the United States to continue to support the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees, with emphasis on retraining and rehabilitation preparatory to such settlement.

Rabbi Arthur Hertzberg, a leader of Conservative Judaism, took issue with a recent statement by Philip M. Klutznick, former president of Bnai Brith, who charged that "disruptive squabbling" among the rabbinate was frustrating religious growth in the American Jewish community.

Rabbi Hertzberg termed Mr. Klutznick's charge a "misstatement of fact." The rabbi, recently appointed chairman of the Social Actions Commission of the Synagogue Council of America, asserted that under the leadership of the rabbinate, synagogues in America in the last twenty years "have doubled the number of Jews affiliated with synagogues, representing the largest relative growth of any religious body in America."

"Jewish life is conceivable if, God forbid, any of our secular agencies were to disappear," he declared, says the New York Times. "If the synagogue were to disappear, there would be no Jewish life."

Moroccans Assail Government For Exit Of Jews To Israel

The Moroccan Government came under heavy attack by leading Left and Right wing political parties for permitting passports to Jewish citizens. Twenty-two thousand Jews requested passports in recent weeks and are expected to leave by the end of January, it was learned from reliable sources, according to the New York Times. At Tahrir, organ of the Leftwing opposition, accused the Government of "betraying" pledges to the Arab League in authorizing a "mass departure of Jews."

Shortly after independence in 1956, Morocco prohibited emigration to Israel on the grounds that Moroccan Jews would settle on lands that rightfully belonged to Arab refugees and would swell the ranks of the Israeli army. Even Al Alam, organ of the dominant Conservative party, expressed concern over the "heavy emigration" of Jews and said the Government's "tolerance" on the issue was being exploited. Official quarters have made no statement on the Jews' departure. Security officials, when questioned, asserted that the Jews were tourists and had received authorization for travel in Europe.

Since the end of November, large groups of Jews have left the country daily by plane. The French liner Lyautey sailed for Marseilles with 700 Jews aboard.

The Arabic press reported the widespread sale of Jewish goods and property. Tracts were reported to have been distributed in some centers, threatening Moslems who purchase any Jewish property with severe reprisals. Jewish circles have remained silent on the departures, presumably from fear that publicity might lead the Government to curtail Jewish travel abroad once more.

The trade-union weekly Avant Garde labeled the emigration "Operation Eichmann" and alleged that the operation was the result of a "deal involving tens of thousands of dollars."

Political observers feared the consequences of the sudden Jewish departures and the reaction of the political parties. At Tahrir reported that 50,000 Jews were preparing to leave the country with official authorization, says the New York Times. The newspaper described the movement as "a concerted Zionist plan to strengthen the state of Israel."

The Government's position can be considered "treason" to Moroccan principles, At Tahrir said, warning that the "general discontent and irritation" over the issue could produce "an explosion."

Important New Book Is U. S. Record Of Jews, 1654 To 1840

The first genealogical survey made of Jewish families who settled in America between 1654 and 1840 was recently published by the Hebrew Union College Press of Cincinnati, Ohio. The massive eight-pound volume, entitled "Americans Of Jewish Descent," contains genealogical tables listing 26,000 names. It is regarded as the most important single research tool to be made available in the field of American Jewish history for many years.

The author of the volume, Rabbi Malcolm H. Stern, of Oheb Shalom Congregation, in Norfolk, Virginia, genealogist for the American Jewish Archives, spent eight years on his research, says the New York Times. Much of his information came from a systematic examination of yellowed family papers, ancient synagogue records, old tombstone inscriptions, and courthouse documents.

The volume is being distributed by University Publishers of New York in a limited edition of 600 copies. The "popular" edition of 550 copies can be purchased for $40 each. Fifty copies printed in a "de luxe" edition can be had for $150 per copy.

In a foreword Dr. Jacob R. Marcus, director of the American Jewish Archives, who has lectured in Canada often, hails the volume for "shedding light on obscure references that up to now have baffled the most skillful of researchers."

"Here, most graphically," he wrote, "one can trace the assimilatory influence of intermarriage and notice not without irony, the unbroken line that leads from a Polish Jewish immigrant peddler to an American Ambassador to one of the great powers." His reference here was to Haym Salomon, who aided the U.S. in the Revolutionary war, and among whose lineal descendants were William Bullitt, former Ambassador to France.

The volume shows that 15 per cent of the marriages recorded before 1840 were marriages between Jews and Christians.

One study based on the book demonstrated that in the period before 1840, the Sephardic (Spanish-Portuguese) Jews in North America intermarried freely with the Ashkenazi (Germanic) and almost the entire early Sephardic community became absorbed by the Ashkenazi.

Rabbi Bertram W. Korn, of Congregation Keneseth Israel, in Philadelphia, Pa., an eminent Jewish historian, said that while no Jews came over on the Mayflower they were among America's earliest settlers, says the New York Times. Among them, Rabbi Korn observed, were "pioneers who tamed the wilderness, opened the frontiers, initiated trade, built cities, and fought for freedom."

Says Rabbinical Law Justifies Doom Of Eichmann

The death sentence meted out to Adolf Eichmann was in keeping with Jewish religious law, according to Dr. Zerah Wahrhaftig, Israel's Minister of Religious Affairs. The special court that tried the former Nazi official sentenced him to death for crimes against the Jewish people, crimes against humanity, and war crimes.

Dr. Wahrhaftig, who gave his views privately before sentence was pronounced, said that from study of the Halakoth he had arrived at the conclusion that the sentence must be death, reports the New York Times. The Halakoth are a rabbinical collection of legal precepts amplifying points not specifically set forth in Mosaic law but deduced from it by analogy.

Eichmann was not charged in the indictment with murder by his own hand. Attorney General Gideon Hausner attempted during the trial to link him with the murder of a Jewish boy in Budapest, but the judges ruled there was insufficient evidence to support this charge.

The burden of the charges on which Eichmann was convicted was that he rounded up Jews and deported them to camps in Poland and elsewhere, where others put them to death. The court declared: "The legal and moral responsibility of a person who delivers a victim to his death is, in our opinion, no smaller, and may even be greater, than the liability of a person who puts the victim to death."

The Halakic argument on this point, Dr. Wahrhaftig said, is that a person who puts someone to death must ordinarily bear responsibility for his act, since he is not bound to do evil even when the victim is sent him by his teacher or mentor.

But another passage of Halakic law, the Minister said, places the guilt on the person who sends a victim to his death if the one who actually performs the murder has no choice.

Eichmann sent his victims to the camps knowing that they would be killed and that the men putting them to death would have no choice, Dr. Wahrhaftig asserted.

To bring Eichmann out of hiding to trial, the Minister said, made it necessary to let justice take its course to the last point. To withdraw short of that point would turn the long proceedings into a show trial, he said.

Dr. Wahrhaftig said he would object to an execution in Jerusalem because the city is regarded as holy, says the New York Times. He also said that he had favored shooting as the method of execution when the subject was considered in the Knesset shortly before the trial, but that a majority had voted for hanging as the method of execution in laws where the death penalty is prescribed.

Joint Distribution Committee Leaders Warn New Crises Menace Communities Overseas

Following somber warnings that the unforeseen crises of 1961 affecting Jewish communities overseas may well have been a harbinger of similar crises in the year ahead, the Joint Distribution Committee adopted a 1962 budget of $30,685,750 for its aid programs.

Addressing more than 400 members of the JDC National Council at the agency's 47th annual meeting, at the Waldorf-Astoria, Moses A. Leavitt, executive vice-chairman, stated that because of their minority role, Jews often suffered more than others in the same areas from the effects of the cold war. Jews were singled out by events unrelated to the cold war, or nearly so, for a special portion of affliction and pain.

Charles Jordan, director-general for overseas operations of the JDC, added that the $30,685,750 budget was a "dangerous minimum" needed to care for an estimated 325,000 needy men, women, and children in 27 overseas countries. "This sum may not be enough," Mr. Jordan declared. "In a world where catastrophes are common, violence 'routine', and emergencies 'normal,' the 1962 budget will prove realistic only if, in the coming 12 months there are no major crises affecting Jews overseas."

Mr. Leavitt cited the outbreak of fighting at Bizerte as an example of 1961 emergencies. Thousands of Jews fled Tunisia in the three months following the Bizerte incident. Nor was this the only country to produce a stream of refugees in 1961. From Algeria, torn by civil war, nearly as many Jews emigrated to Israel in the first seven months of 1961 as in all the years from 1956 to 1961.

"The impact of newcomers was particularly heavy on France, which is today the second largest Jewish community in France," he said. "As a result of the influx from North Africa, the city's Jewish population rose from 8,000 in the mid-1950's to between 35,000 and 40,000 even before the refugees from Tunisia started to arrive."

Thousands of additional refugees are expected to enter France before the end of 1962, Mr. Leavitt said. "Emergency aid must be provided for the refugees immediately upon their arrival, cash grants, food, medical aid, and housing." He indicated that these burdens would be too great for the French Jewish community to carry alone and that the JDC would have to be prepared to assume a large part of the costs.

As a result of these and other emergencies, Mr. Leavitt said, JDC incurred a deficit of nearly $1,000,000 in 1961, the first in ten years.

Mr. Leavitt also presented the JDC budget to the National Conference of the United Jewish Appeal. JDC receives its funds chiefly from the campaigns of the United Jewish Appeal.

Presiding at the meeting was Edward M. M. Warburg, who was re-elected JDC chairman for the 17th consecutive year. He told the assembled Jewish leaders that JDC was faced with far greater and more difficult problems than those of the last several years. "Once again, there are countries in which the tide of anti-Jewish violence is rising," he said. "Once again, tens of thousands of men, women, and children are living on the edge of anxiety. Once again, thousands are searching for a refuge, with the possibility that far greater numbers will follow.

"It is such events as these which have created the problems with which we must deal today. They have imposed heavy burdens upon the Jewish communities which have provided haven for the refugees. They have created a tremendous drain on the financial resources of JDC. These increased needs have heightened the responsibility of American Jews for providing funds for survival, to save lives, to prevent disaster. This is not a matter of choice for us. It is an obligation," he said.

A new JDC film, "A New Kind Of Student," described the work of the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work in Israel which was established in Jerusalem in 1958 by the JDC in cooperation with the Israel Ministry of Health and The Hebrew University of Jerusalem for the training of social workers.

Summing up JDC's 1961 activities, Mr. Leavitt said preliminary figures indicate that JDC will have aided more than 240,000 men, women, and children in 27 countries around the world by the end of the year. This includes more than 110,000 in Moslem areas; more than 50,000 in 13 European countries; and some 72,000 in Israel. These programs included cash relief for 40,610; a feeding program for 92,970; medical aid to more than 35,000; assistance to schools with almost 72,000 students; and to cultural and religious programs serving more than 30,000. From January 1 to June 30, JDC-sponsored loan funds issued nearly 4,000 loans amounting to more than $1,750,000. More than 22,000 students attended JDC-aided ORT vocational training schools during the same period.

In presenting the 1962 JDC budget, Mr. Jordan reported that Jewish communities in European countries are facing almost impossible problems in attempting to cope with the flood of refugees. "They have created immense problems, both immediate and long-term, for the Jewish organizations to which they turn for assistance," he said. "The majority of the people come without any means. They have to be given money to board a bus or a trolley-car to take them away from the dock, and cash for a sandwich on the train to the next city."

Housing is a particularly crucial problem, Mr. Jordan said. "They are crowding into shabby little hotels, six, eight and 10 to a room." The $30,685,750 is the minimum, required to meet the basic needs of 110,000 men, women, and children in Moslem countries; of 50,000 in 15 countries of Europe; of more than 70,000 in Israel; and tens of thousands in other areas. JDC's program will provide food for children; home care for the aged; medical care, food, clothing, and housing for refugees; day-care centers, canteens, hospitals, vocational training, loans, and assistance to cultural and religious programs.

The largest single item on the budget, $9,000,000, is earmarked for the JDC-Malben program in Israel for the care of aged, ill, and handicapped newcomers, Mr. Jordan said. The next largest item is for aid to over 100,000 Jews in Moslem countries, $6,200,000. Almost $5,000,000 will be spent on aid in European countries.

In Israel, JDC will provide services for some 70,000 in 1962. Of these, more than 44,000 will be cared for in the Malben program alone, through its network of institutions and services, its non-institutional programs and its rehabilitation services. Another $850,000 will be allocated for religious and cultural programs.

In adopting the budget, the delegates also passed a resolution voicing support for the 1962 campaign of the United Jewish Appeal, and approving the adoption of a special campaign to meet emergency needs arising from the renewed migration of large numbers of Jews.

Lessons Of The Swastika Smearings

BY HADMI LEVINE, ORGANIZATION DIRECTOR OF THE AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS

To the American Jewish community, eager to believe that Nazism died with the Allied victory over Hitler, the wave of swastika smearings and synagogue desecrations of 1960 came as a disturbing shock. The first fears and anxieties over these outbreaks were stilled, however, with the reassuring statements of responsible government officials and community leaders that the outbreaks were "the work of delinquents or crackpots and did not reflect any real anti-Jewish feeling." But in spite of these reassurances there has remained in many segments of the Jewish community a gnawing doubt that perhaps such outbreaks did indeed reflect some deep and subtle anti-Semitic feeling and should not be casually ignored.

These doubts have now been strengthened by a recent study made by Dr. Martin Deutsch titled, "The 1960 Swastika Smearings: Analysis of Apprehended Youth." (This study was made possible by the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith. It will be published in the spring issue of the Merrill-Palmer Quarterly.) Dr. Deutsch is associate professor, Institute for Developmental Studies, Department of Psychiatry, New York Medical College. His study demonstrates that the actions of these young offenders, and certainly the actions of their leaders, were motivated by a commitment to Nazi ideology and a hatred of Jews. The conclusions reached by Dr. Deutsch on the basis of his study point to serious consequences for the Jewish community; indeed, for the entire American community.

Of the 154 young people apprehended during the swastika smearing episode, 76 were interviewed for this study. The selections were made at random, depending on the willingness of the local officials to permit the interviews and the availability of trained personnel. Of the 76 interviews, only 41 were extensive enough to meet the demanding tests Dr. Deutsch established for his study. However, though the sampling was therefore small, there is no reason to suppose, as Dr. Deutsch states, "that they do not reflect many if not most of the characteristics and motivations of the larger group."

All of the 41 persons were white. (In the entire group of 154, only two were Negro.) Their median age was 16. Thirty-two were of Protestant background, although 18 of them disclaimed any religious affiliation. Seven were Catholic, of whom two made disclaimers; two were partly Jewish and both disclaimed any religious affiliation.

Twenty-two of the youths had some kind of previous police record, mostly for petty offenses. Thirty-three of the families were classified as "broken or unstable." The family histories were replete with alcoholism, mental illness, chronic ailments, philandering fathers, divorce, prison records, etc.

Nineteen expressed very favorable attitudes towards Nazism or Germans, and 21 expressed strong anti-Semitic bias. Eleven reported that they had read Mein Kampf, (one had read it 11 times); 14 belonged to Nazi-oriented groups. (In the sampling of 76, between 25 to 30 belonged to such groups.) Six said their primary source of Nazi ideology had been "Nazi organizations." Thirteen attributed it to newspapers and radio, while 12 mentioned TV and movies, particularly movies such as "The Young Lions," "The Crooked Cross," and other pictures depicting precision marching, group chanting, etc., by Nazis. Dr. Deutsch notes that "It seemed to be unimportant that the picture was basically anti-Nazi; the youths were only interested in the militaristic parts, projecting their fantasies onto the swastikas, and were somehow able — or so they report — to be completely unaware of the story content."

When those with a strong Nazi ideology were asked how they felt about Nazi-American conflict in the last war, they rationalized their Nazi identifications by claiming that we were tricked into the war by Jewish Communist control of the government, newspapers, and army (occasionally the English and Negroes were added to this ownership group).

Some seemed to arrive at their anti-Jewish feeling only as a necessary appendage to their Nazi orientation. First they were attracted to the militaristic glamor of Nazism and then subsequently became anti-Semitic. Others were anti-Semitic first because "they don't like rich people, and Jews are rich." These subsequently became Nazis only as a result of their dislike of Jews.

Regardless, however, of which route produced the anti-Semite, most of the offenders had never met Jews nor had they any personal experience with Jews that could in any way have produced their hostility. All their answers to questions about Jews were in terms of vague generalities and not related to personal experience. Thus they would say, "Jews control all the money," but they had never met a Jew who controlled large sums of money. Or, "Jews cheat," yet they never had met a Jew who cheated them. Or, "Jews control the government," yet they could not mention a Jew who controlled the government.

This lack of personal animosity, Dr. Deutsch suggests, might be responsible for the fact that in the 1960 outbreak these youths attacked property, not persons. Their hatred seemed directed against symbolic institutions, rather than any specific person or particular individual.

The most important portion of the Deutsch study is directed toward determining what made Nazism attractive to these young people. Why did they turn to Mein Kampf and the swastika? What in our American social, economic or cultural milieu could produce children who find their most gratifying experience in identifying with the brutality, authoritarianism and militarism of the Nazi creed?

Dr. Deutsch has two explanations. The first relates to the type of family structure from which these children came. In all of the cases analyzed, the families "live in a social vacuum . . . detached and isolated." In sociological terms, they seem to have "maximum anomie." They have, Dr. Deutsch reports, "little communication with each other; they have very few friends, practically no leisure time activities . . . They have few if any books in the home, they seldom if ever visit with friends or neighbors, and when asked about movies or other entertainment, with a few exceptions, said they were not interested and did not participate."

In short, they were isolated and lonesome human beings. It is highly possible, Dr. Deutsch concludes, that "the anomic structure of these families establishes the basis for their ideological flirtation with highly-structured authoritarian systems that can supply a rigid social context for their bridging of interpersonal barriers." And what can be more highly structured and authoritarian than Nazism!

Dr. Deutsch suggests still another explanation for the behavior of these young people. Most of them come from economic groups that are feeling most directly the great Negro and Puerto Rican migrations into our urban centers and the rapid sweep of automation eliminating many skilled and unskilled jobs. Housing has become scarce, employment difficult, and the future seems indeed bleak and unpromising. This produces the feelings of inadequacy, boredom, frustration and hostility that can easily be funneled into delinquency, prejudice, and outright violence.

Interestingly enough, this hostility is not directed, in this sample at least, primarily against the Negro and Puerto Rican. Instead, it is directed mostly against the Jew who, in their mind, is the symbol of the affluent society. By attacking the Jew they are attacking a symbol of what is wrong with our society, without directly attacking society itself. At the same time the Jew is "a minority" and in that sense is weak and more easily hurt. This is most dramatically seen in several of the answers given by the offenders as to why they painted swastikas and why they chose synagogues. One of the young people interviewed, for example, stated:

> The reason that I did it was that I have had an increasing feeling against society the way things are going [italics added]. To cite one example: there are children coming to the County Hospital who are suffering from malnutrition and here this country is giving away millions and millions of dollars for foreign aid when they haven't cleaned up their own back doorstep. This sort of thing has been getting under my skin. Knowing that I am such a small person and couldn't do anything about it I became so frustrated that I wanted to strike out against society. In general the emblem of strength and power that I could see was the German swastika. I have always admired the German people for their strength and power. I have found among them a few individuals who have created these atrocities during the war, but they have always had strength that I have admired so I chose this symbol because of its strength.

The Jewish race and the Temple were synonymous with the lower party of the larger party, representatives of minorities who the German people were above. When I used this symbol of power there had to be a symbol of lesser power and so I chose the Jewish synagogue. When I chose the swastika, I had to choose the Jews. They were synonymous. If I had chosen the hammer and sickle I might have chosen a different group, probably the present symbol of our democracy, the city hall or something like that.

Another stated: It's kind of hard to put in words because you're dealing with emotions and emotions are awfully hard to describe. R. [his friend and leader of the Nazi gang to which he belonged] has always admired the German people and I have always admired the German people for a multiple of reasons: sharp uniforms, strength of character, severity, quite a few things. We both seem to agree that the swastika on the door of the Jewish Temple would be the ultimate in a protest against society for what they were letting be done to them. [italics added]

With few exceptions the Deutsch study showed no remorse among the parents over the nature of their children's Nazi and anti-Semitic behavior; they were only sorry that their children got into trouble. Indeed, Dr. Deutsch suggests that these parents might have taken vicarious satisfaction in their children's behavior:

Their expressions of disapproval were concerned with the community's negative reaction, the bad publicity, and the fact of the youths' arrest. Few comments focused disapproval on the act itself. These people, largely lower middle class and extremely sensitive to overt community mores, could not have committed the acts themselves, but could have taken vicarious satisfaction in their children's participation.

Thus it would be a mistake to conclude that the 1960 outbreak reflected only the attitudes and sympathies of children. The Deutsch study gives credence to a conclusion that these children were acting in a manner that had the sympathy and tacit approval of adult members of their family or at least "was not fully inconsistent with the values of their home."

In view of Dr. Deutsch's conclusions, what, if anything, can the Jewish community and Jewish organizations do to prevent outbreaks similar to the 1960 swastika epidemic? What can they do to prevent the development of pro-Nazi, anti-Jewish attitudes among young people if, as the Deutsch study concludes, these attitudes are the result of family instability and isolation, economic and social pressures, frustration and boredom? Or are these problems outside the legitimate purview of Jewish organizational life?

It would seem to me that any condition which may result in a commitment to Nazism or anti-Jewish attitudes cannot be viewed as outside the legitimate purview of Jewish organizational life. The Jewish community must in some way make these issues part of its organizational concern. Toward this end, it is suggested:

1. That Jewish organizations become more involved in community problems, community services, in the development of school curriculum, in the struggle for more low- and middle-income housing, and in the struggle for full employment. Dr. Deutsch points out that the number of marginal people will grow larger with the increasing social and economic changes of our time. It is these marginal people that produce the swastika smearers and synagogue desecrators. Dr. Deutsch reminds us that "the 1960 cycle of anti-Semitic incidents took place during a dip in the economy. The argument here for systematic planning to ease social transition needs no elaboration here." Jewish organizations must become more involved in their community's plans to ease social transition.

2. It is clear, too, from the Deutsch study that these children received no help from any psychological or guidance services concerning their future, i.e., careers, possible employment, educational needs, etc. Nor was there any youth program in their community to offer them alternatives to boredom. Jewish organizations must play a larger role in the development of such programs — guidance and recreational — on a community level.

3. According to the youths interviews, "there was no education about Nazism, World War II, or prejudice in their school experience." It is possible that the confirmed Nazi youth would react to teachings about the Hitler era in the same way as he responded to anti-Nazi films and books. Dr. Deutsch suggests, however, that "a program of education, started early, having real substance, and teaching the meaning and the historic role of basic democratic ideology might help to inoculate some of these youths against Nazi ideology and even assist in helping some of them become proponents of democratic values."

Here, too, Jewish organizations can play a key role in examining the curriculum of the schools and in making recommendations on textbooks used, subjects taught, and curriculum content.

Wisc. U. Prof. To Make Study Of Near East Politics

A new contribution to understanding of today's Near East will be inaugurated by a University of Wisconsin Semitic languages scholar. On leave for the second semester, Prof. Menahem Mansoor, chairman of the UW department of Hebrew and Semitic studies, will go to Harvard to work as research fellow with Sir Hamilton Gibb on a documentary study of diplomacy and politics in the Near East. Following the period at Harvard's Center for Middle Eastern Studies, he will continue the project on the Wisconsin campus under Wisconsin support.

Prof. Mansoor plans to identify, classify, and study all Arabic documents and international agreements entered into by the Arab countries from 1930 to 1960 as well as such prior agreements as are relevant to the later period. The project will also include Israeli and UN documents referring to the Near East. Results of this phase will be published in two volumes. Later, in 15 volumes, the documents themselves will be reproduced in English translation. The publications will fill a vital reference need for political scientists, modern historians, UN officials, U.S. State Department personnel, International business agencies, and members of the Arab world.

"The lack of such sources is partially due to the relative youth of the Arab countries involved," a description of the project points out, "yet this very quality makes the need greater." The awakening social consciousness of these countries is chronicled in their new constitutions and state papers, and in the day-to-day decisions and commitments embodied in their treaties and agreements with foreign states.

The newest undertaking developed out of a UW department of Hebrew studies project supported by the UW Office of Education to prepare an advanced reader in legal and documentary Arabic.

TORONTO MARRIAGES

KESTENBERG-WEISDORF

The marriage of Miss Carol Goldie Weisdorf, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Weisdorf, 25 Allingham Gardens, to Harvey Kestenberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Kestenberg, 76 Collinson Boulevard, was solemnized on Tuesday, December 19, at half-past five o'clock, at Adath Israel Synagogue, by Rabbi Albert Pappenheim, assisted by Cantor Murray Nixon. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a white gown of peau de faille, with embroidery and appliques on the broad neckline; long sleeves; and bouffant skirt which was shaped to a chapel train. A jewelled crown held her finger-tip tulle illusion veil; and she carried a white bible with white orchids. The matron of honour was Mrs. Harold Kochberg, cousin of the bride, who wore a pink satin gown, designed with a fitted bodice; shoe-string straps; and bouffant skirt; and had a cascade of pink and magenta flowers. The maid of honour, Miss Linda Kestenberg, sister of the groom, wore a pink, brocaded gown, with its own bolero jacket; and bell-shaped skirt. The bridesmaids were: Miss Annette Cooper and Mrs. Sheldon Weingarten, cousins of the bride; Miss Marilyn Weisdorf, sister of the bride; and Miss Sharon Swimmer, in gowns identical with that of the maid of honour. All had rhinestone tiaras; and carried white muffs with pink and magenta bouquets. The best man was Irving Weisdorf, brother of the bride. The ushers were: Harold Kochberg, cousin of the bride; Barry and Ralph Shulman, cousins of the groom; Harvey Black, Kelly Ginsberg, and Larry Silverberg. The ring-bearer was Michael Samet, of Cincinnati, Ohio. The wedding music was played by Murray Alter and his orchestra. At a dinner three hundred and eighty guests were received. Mrs. Weisdorf, the bride's mother, wore a long, pink satin, gown, fashioned with a beaded bodice; short sleeves; a full skirt with a bustle back; also a pink hat; and a corsage of pink orchids. Mrs. Kestenberg, the groom's mother, was attired in a long, sheath of turquoise-blue satin with silver threads; with a matching hat; and had a white orchid wristlet. Mrs. Sarah Desenhouse, 34 Sullivan Street, the bride's grandmother, wore a blue, lace gown; with a corsage of pink roses. Mrs. Molly Lewis, 3698 Bathurst Street, the groom's grandmother, was in a blue lace gown set over a pink satin underskirt; and had a corsage of pink roses. Mrs. Hilda Lappin, 401 Castlefield Avenue, the groom's grandmother, wore a brown, brocaded sheath gown; with a corsage of Talisman roses. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Kestenberg spent their wedding trip in Nassau, The Bahamas. The bride travelled in a three-piece, brown, tweed suit; with an off-white beaver hat. They will reside at 76 Collinson Boulevard. Here for the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. S. Samet, and Michael, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. D. Tutleman, of Minneapolis, Minn.; Mr. and Mrs. Noel Phillips, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. R. Connor, and Mrs. M. Krivoshea, of Winnipeg, Man.; and Mr. and Mrs. H. Starkman, of Hamilton, Ont.

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

STORFER-SHAP

The marriage of Miss Joyce Shap, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Moe Shap, 4476 Wilson Avenue, to Myer Storfer, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Storfer, 12188 Joseph Casavant Street, was solemnized at Beth El Synagogue, on December 16, at six o'clock, by Rabbi Allan M. Langner. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was gowned in white silk peau d'ange, with a fitted, beaded bodice, made with a boat-shaped neckline; dropped, elbow length sleeves; and sheath skirt embroidered with seed-pearl-beads and sequins, fashioned at the back with an Obi train trimmed with pouff-piping caught at the waist with a pleated cummerbund. Her five-tiered veil of silk tulle illusion was caught to a beaded, pill-box cap; and she carried a prayer book with white orchids and stephanotis. Miss Sema Shap, as maid of honour for her sister, was in an ice-blue, silk, peau de faille gown, made with a fitted bodice; fichu neckline; and pannier skirt; and adorned with seed-pearl-beads and crystals. Her matching, flowered headdress was trimmed with veiling; and she carried a bouquet of pink and red roses. Carl Storfer was best man for his brother. The ushers were: Bernard, Irving, Murray, and William Storfer, brothers of the groom; and Donald Engel, Irwin Glassman, Howard Glickman, Hersh Melnick, Mendel Spivack, and Joshuah Thau. Standards of white and yellow pom-poms, arranged with greenery, were the wedding flowers. There was orchestra music. Afterwards a reception was held for one hundred and eighty guests in the Synagogue hall. Mrs. Shap, mother of the bride, was in a blue, Chantilly lace gown, made with a fitted bodice; square neckline; three-quarter-length sleeves; and a side-draped skirt, over matching silk taffeta. Her hat was blue; and her corsage was of red roses. Mrs. Storfer, mother of the groom, wore a teal-blue, brocaded gown, made with a portrait neckline; cap sleeves; and sheath skirt with back fullness extending into a court train; also a matching hat; and had a corsage of gold-coloured roses. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer Storfer spent their wedding trip in Acapulco, and Mexico City, Mexico, the bride departing in a black, knitted ensemble. They have taken up residence at 11342 James Morrice Street. Here for the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. L. V. Kraft, and daughter, Miss Marsha Kraft; Mr. and Mrs. J. Rabbi Charles Bender officiated, assisted by Cantor E. Goldberger. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white silk gown, made with a fitted bodice; having a scooped neckline; long sleeves ending with embroidered cuffs of seed-pearl and drop-pearl-beads; the full bouffant skirt made with a front panel, and a chapel train embroidered with seed-pearl and drop-pearl-beads. Her veil of tulle illusion was draped to a double crown of seed-pearl-beads; and she carried a white prayer book adorned with orchids and stephanotis. Mrs. Arnold Slover, as matron of honour for her cousin, was in a turquoise-blue silk gown, with square neckline; and had a pill-box hat embroidered with turquoise-blue seed-pearl-beads. Her flowers were a cascade of turquoise-blue and gold-coloured carnations. Misses Barbara Pascal, Nicki Steinberg, Elaine Kerner, and Carol Moscovitch, as bridesmaids, were gowned alike in gold-coloured satin, made with bouffant skirts. They had pill-box hats of that shade; and carried semi-cascades of gold and bronze-coloured carnations. Herbert Wax was best man. The ushers were: Teddy Nadel, David Rutenberg, Ronald Adelson, Leonard Sabloff, Paul Echenberg, Fred Wax, Arnold Slover, and Melvyn Davidson. She had a matching hat; and a corsage of turquoise-blue and white orchids. He was awarded a Bachelor of Science degree from Scranton University in 1950; received a Master of Arts degree and was ordained Rabbi in 1957. That year he went to Temple Oheb Shalom, in Baltimore, Maryland, as assistant Rabbi, and in June 1960 was elected Associate Rabbi of this historic congregation. Rabbi Poller is now doing graduate work at the Baltimore Hebrew College. In his remarks to the congregation at the annual dinner, Rabbi Poller said: "The synagogue should never be considered a place of refuge from the storm of life. It is not a fall-out shelter or a crutch. The synagogue is most important and effective not when it draws people into its precincts, but when it sends them forth with a will and determination to build better communities". Until Rabbi Poller takes up permanent residence in Montreal, Rabbi Jacob J. Eisen, formerly assistant rabbi at Holy Blossom Temple in Toronto, is serving as interim leader.

Noted Israeli Archeologist Describes Exciting Finds In Desert Caves

Prof. Yigael Yadin, Professor of Archeology at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, announced that a total of sixty-four ancient documents, "the largest single collection of written documents ever unearthed in the Holy Land", was found by the Hebrew University archeological team which he led in two expeditions to the Judean Desert caves near the Dead Sea. Prof. Yadin, former Chief of Staff of the Israel defense forces, described the documents at a press conference at University House, the national headquarters of the American Friends of the Hebrew University, 11 East 69 Street, New York.

Characterizing the result of the recent expeditions as "the greatest find of this kind since the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls," Prof. Yadin pointed out that the documents are written in Hebrew, Aramaic, Nabatean, and Greek. "The oldest document dates back to the year 88 A.D., while the other documents range down to 'the third year of Bar Kosiba (Bar Kochba), Prince of Israel', that is, 135 A.D.," he stated. Among the 64 documents are two fragments of Biblical scrolls, one from the Book of Numbers and one from the Book of Psalms. "These are among the earliest fragments of the traditional (Masoretic) text of the Bible," Prof. Yadin said.

"The importance of these finds lies primarily in the fact that nearly all of the documents found during the second expedition to the caves are absolutely dated, many of them triple-dated with the year, month, and day. The system of dating in many of these documents is also a triple one, with dates recorded according to the years of reign of the Roman emperors, the consuls in Rome, as well as the local calendar. This absolute dating establishes beyond question the date of the Bar Kochba letters which were found during our first expedition, since the letters were discovered in the very same cave," Prof. Yadin asserted. "Moreover, these documents also provide a firm basis for evaluating the Dead Sea Scrolls on paleographic grounds," he said.

"Because of the dry atmospheric conditions in the caves, we also discovered for the first time many objects made of perishable materials which are otherwise not found in excavations, such as great quantities of clothes, textiles, and wooden vessels. The absolute dating of the documents also enables us to date these objects, which is of great importance from an archeological point of view. This is particularly significant with respect to the textiles, which are the oldest dated group found in the Holy Land. This last conclusion was confirmed only a few days ago in the course of my visit to the Textile Museum in Washington where I consulted on this matter with Miss Louisa Bellinger, the world authority on ancient textiles.

"These new discoveries, rich in legal, geographic, historical, and sociological information, will aid us greatly in lifting the veil of obscurity from a most important period in the history of the Holy Land, the Jewish people, and the Roman Empire. Just as the Hazor excavations, for example, have established the historical accuracy of the Biblical data concerning Joshua, Solomon, and the later kings of Israel, so do these newly-discovered documents establish the historicity of the information preserved in the traditional Jewish sources of the Mishna and Talmud concerning the life and events during and immediately after the Second Jewish Commonwealth. They also shed new light on the traditional Jewish sources themselves."

ORT Meets The Surge For Vocational Training Of Jews

From an address at a membership luncheon at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in Montreal

BY DR. ARTHUR BRODEY, OF TORONTO, ONTARIO, NATIONAL EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF WOMEN'S CANADIAN ORT

The great surge for vocational training and education has propelled ORT, Organization for Rehabilitation through Training, a world-wide voluntary agency in twenty countries on five continents, into the forefront of Jewish philanthropic and social endeavours, and has captured the attention of the whole world for the excellence of its training, particularly among the underprivileged youth of North Africa and Iran, Israel and Europe. History has thrust us onto the very threshold of a new era in ORT when technical skills are the very basis of the industrial development of the nations of the world.

ORT was started eighty years ago in Russia to normalize the economic life of Jewish masses after centuries of disabilities. Through trade and agricultural schools, it gave them the opportunity to raise themselves from a marginal subsistence level to take their place in the modern industrial world with dignity, freedom, economically secure. It became an international organization around 1920 to serve, not only the fragmented Jewish communities of Eastern Europe, but eventually Jews throughout a great part of the world. ORT virtually reconstructed the economic life of the Jewish people.

The importance of vocational training was increased after World War II to meet the new technological and atomic age. ORT developed vocational High Schools as its major units, and now served mostly youths under eighteen years of age, many of whom had lived in backward nations without hope or opportunity for a decent livelihood.

Today there are 40,000 students learning seventy modern skills in 650 installations. Israel is now the largest ORT operation with an enrollment of nearly 13,000 students in a network of over twenty communities. The surge for vocational training has resulted from the increasing industrial expansion of Israel. Israel has a great shortage of skilled technicians.

As the largest vocational agency in Israel, representing forty per cent of the vocational schools there, ORT is called upon to expand its facilities, building new classrooms and laboratories, equipping them with modern machinery; adding new courses at the request of the Israeli Government. World ORT's budget in Israel has increased eightfold in the last ten years. Thousands of students cannot be admitted because of the lack of facilities and means. The Israeli Government and communities give subventions up to sixty per cent of the expenditures of World ORT in Israel. New accelerated apprentice courses are being established in large industrial centers. Already over 3,000 students are being trained in Jaffa and Jerusalem. It is expected that some 10,000 students will eventually be accommodated in these apprentice schools designed to fill the lag in skilled works.

In addition, ORT is called upon in Israel to train Afro-Asian students to eventually return to their countries to supervise vocational training as part of its technical assistance program. The Jerusalem ORT Center is training fourteen Cypriots in its schools. In addition to Israel, the United States, as part of its Technical Assistance Program through its International Cooperation Administration, has made a contract with World ORT to survey vocational needs in eight African nations.

Women's Canadian ORT is a membership organization. It has a fourfold program of supporting World ORT installations; scholarships for the training of teachers in its training institution in Switzerland; social assistance to supply needy students with hot meals, work clothing, medical attention, recreation, etc., and finally, its Jerusalem ORT School Project, the enlarging and expanding of this Center as the special project of Women's Canadian ORT in conjunction with the Canadian ORT Federation and the Canadian Jewish Congress. This school, nearing completion, will serve as an enduring monument to Canadian Jewry.

Through membership dues and the raising of funds through its membership projects, it supports this fourfold program, supplementing the subventions of the Jewish Welfare Funds throughout Canada to World ORT through the Canadian Jewish Congress.

It is this great surge for vocational training that makes increased membership throughout Canada an urgent necessity of the first order, and a great challenge to all Jewish women of Canada.

JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE LEADERS

Sol Satinsky, of Philadelphia, Pa., who was re-elected chairman of the National Council, urged the assembled communal leaders to alert their communities to the new and urgent problems and needs of Jews overseas. He stressed the importance of getting the JDC story told and described some of the steps being taken by the agency to inform communities of overseas developments.

"Thousands of men and women throughout America," he said, are hearing the desperate story of overseas needs, are having their questions answered, are gaining new insight into the problems which we must face. They are learning once again that JDC aid still means "survival."

U. S. LEADERS

Mr. Klutznick's views on Jewish life were set forth in his book, "No Easy Answers," which was published very recently. Among other things, he scored Jewish religious leaders for what he described as their "unwarranted urge" for the synagogue to dominate all of Jewish community life.

W.J.C. Notes U.N. Failure To Implement Human Rights Covenants

The World Jewish Congress, in a message on the thirteenth anniversary of the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights, expressed concern at the delay in the adoption of implementing Covenants which would bind governments to observe the Declaration's principles. It was sent by Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, Permanent Representative of the World Jewish Congress at the United Nations, to Acting Secretary-General U Thant.

Pledging the World Jewish Congress to do all in its power to further the cause of human rights in all parts of the world, Dr. Perlzweig noted: "But it would be foolish to blind ourselves to the fact that the road on which we are committed to travel is long and arduous. While the Universal Declaration marks a turning point of immense importance in the struggle for human emancipation, the United Nations, after years of discussion and consultation and the scrutiny of texts, is not yet in sight of the adoption of the Covenants under which governments will bind themselves to give practical effect to the principles of the Universal Declaration."

There were governments, loud in their advocacy of self-determination, the WJC leader declared, which still continued "to tolerate or sanction slavery in its most primitive forms, or, having achieved independence, find it expedient to curtail or even to abrogate the civil liberties which their citizens enjoyed under colonial regimes."

He added that unfortunately there were too few countries which could claim that the rights enumerated in the Declaration were freely exercised, without discrimination, by their inhabitants. He said that in large areas, both in the East and the West, among nations which are aligned or non-aligned, the Universal Declaration has not even been accepted as the standard which it was designed to become. The anniversary of the Declaration was not only the celebration of an act of faith by the international community in the past. It was a resolve to continue and intensify an unremitting struggle "to put into living practice what has for so long been the aspiration of men in so many nations."

Dr. Perlzweig said the World Jewish Congress was well aware that diplomatic conflicts and the menace of war must postpone the fulfillment of hopes for the universal recognition of the rights of the human personality under the sanctions of international law, "but we are deeply convinced that every advance in the field of human rights brings nearer the day of peace and international understanding."

The World Jewish Congress is a global body representing Jewish communities in 64 lands.

One Unchanging Tune Sounds In Jewish Ears

Lay leaders of congregations in the United Synagogue of America will now be required to be able to read Hebrew and participate in worship service.

They will also be required to attend services regularly.

These provisions were made in resolutions adopted by the biennial convention of the United Synagogue. Laymen who do not qualify for election because of these provisions must undertake a study program before they are eligible to serve in an official capacity.

The convention theme was "Torah: A Blueprint For Our Lives", devoting most sessions to the standards of the synagogue and its leaders. Candidates for synagogue office in the Conservative Movement will now have to be required to conduct themselves "in accordance with the high standards reflected in the religious, moral, and ethical tenets of our faith." In addition, members elected to synagogue boards of trustees will be required to pursue a program of individual study directed towards increasing their mastery of Judaica and to take part in their synagogue's ongoing adult Jewish education program.

The convention called for the broadening of the Committee on Jewish Law and Standards of the Rabbinical Assembly to include equal representation for the United Synagogue. The composition of the committee will in future be determined by the presidents of the United Synagogue and the Rabbinical Assembly "in consultation with each other."

Laymen and rabbis alike urged closer study of the Bible. Rabbi Ralph Simon, of Chicago, and Rabbi Bernard Segal, United Synagogue executive director spoke for a return to the study of the Bible for the answer to many of the pressing problems that face mankind today. Rabbi Louis Finkelstein, Chancellor of the Jewish Theological Seminary, in New York, called on the Jews and other men to heed the teachings of the biblical prophets who urged their own imperilled generation to "try to live as civilized human beings." He said their teachings applied with equal force today: "While the world in which they lived was shaking as ours is today, the prophets exhorted their fellow citizens with one unchanging tune: try to live rationally, try to be unafraid, try to think of your apparent enemy as your misled brother."

The heart of the problem, he said, is not in Washington or Moscow, but in the personal life and dedication of each man. He said: "For Amos, Isaiah, and Jeremiah, the question was not 'Will we survive?' but 'Do we deserve to survive?' The prophets would have been more worried about our souls than about our bodies. Even faced with the possibility of thermonuclear war, they would have been more frightened at the thought of committing murder than at the thought of being murdered."

The convention delegates were told by the Israeli Consul-General in New York, Binyamin Eliav, that Israel needed the men and ideas of the Conservative Movement. He said: "We need you in Israel not only as tourists, but as the bearers of your ideas. We need the freshness of your approach, which is so ingenious in maintaining traditional Judaism in a way that conforms with modern life." Visitors from foreign countries who addressed the convention included Dr. Mika Weiss, Chief Rabbi of Finland; and Rabbi Marshall T. Meyer, of Congregation Israelita Buenos Aires, first U.S.-trained rabbi to serve in Latin America.
